Becoming a Disability Awareness Trainer

Take the first step to gain the skills and knowledge to train others in disability awareness and rights.

Course Aims

The course is an interactive workshop aimed at people with a learning disability. It will introduce training tools that will help young people to become more aware of disability rights and to support them in starting the process of becoming disability awareness trainers. The course will involve looking at the Disability Discrimination Act and 'social model of disability'.

After this course delegates will be able to:

- Have an understanding of the Disability Discrimination Act.
- Understand and fully support the 'social model of disability'.
- Be able to think about designing together a one day training package they could use after further training and support.
- Identify how they could further their training as a trainer.
- Be more confident in promoting their rights.

Designed for

This course is aimed at people of any ages who are interested in promoting their rights and want to be able to deliver training to professional organisations, public service providers or the private sector.
