Taking Risks

Developing common sense approaches to helping people get on with everyday life.

Course Aims

To help delegates assess and manage health and safety and risks, with the aim of enabling children and adults with learning disabilities to live fulfilled and active lives.

The course will enable delegates to approach risk assessment from the starting point of “how can we make this happen” as oppose to “this is too dangerous, we must not let it happen”.

By taking into account statutory obligations to ensure the safety of clients and customers, as well as the need to let individuals make decisions and take control over their own lives, this course will help delegates steer a course through these different priorities.

After this course delegates will be able to:

- Understand their obligations to assess and manage health and safety
- Recognise ways in which people can be “over – protected” and it’s affects upon individuals
- Develop ways of working with health and safety policies in order to allow people to take acceptable risks in life.

Designed for

Anyone working with children or adults with a learning disability, that have a responsibility to manage and identify risks and who want to explore ways of enabling people to live a fulfilled life.
